Dr. Susan Hockfield Selected 16th President excerpts from the MIT News Office

Susan Hockfield, a distinguished neuroscientist and current Provost at Yale University, has been selected the 16th president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She will assume her new duties as MIT's president on December 6, 2004.

Dr. Hockfield was elected by the MIT Corporation during a special meeting of that governing body on August 26, and spoke to the MIT community later that day. Here are some of her remarks from that meeting.

"I am deeply honored to have been selected as MIT's sixteenth president. As a scientist, I have always regarded MIT as a beacon, projecting an incredibly bright light that has illuminated the path of discovery and innovation for the entire world.

"I know that I am only one of countless people who have been inspired—and awed—by MIT's strengths along the entire continuum of scholarship, from the most fundamental, basic research into the nature of our world, to the most advanced applications and technological innovations.

"MIT's remarkable history of discovery and innovation alone might well have been enough to draw me here, but over these last few months, I have discovered another, critically important feature of this institution's character—something that speaks to the values and ideals that seem to be the very foundation of this place.

MIT Family Weekend Has Record Attendance

696 families composed of 2186 parents, family members and students from 46 states and 9 foreign countries attended Family Weekend 2004, October 15-17, 2004. This is a 6% increase over 2003.

Highlights of the weekend included a keynote address by Institute Professor and former Secretary of the Air Force, Sheila Widnall '60, on the "Columbia Disaster and Implications for the Education of Future Engineers" and the Mac Vicar Faculty Fellows presentation by Professor Woodie Flowers ME '68, "Toward 21st Century Renaissance Minds."

Students demonstrated that the arts are alive and well at MIT. They entertained guests with spectacular music and dance performances. The MIT Wind, Jazz and Dance Ensembles serenaded families Friday evening. On Saturday, six very talented student dance groups performed in Walker Memorial, followed by the MIT Concert Band in the afternoon, and the grand finale student a cappella concert in Kresge Saturday night.

There were lots of smiling faces on campus. One student's parents commented about their Family Weekend experience:

"Phenomenal...and more!! We feel fortunate that our daughter is in an environment where the emphasis is on learning and challenging one's self. The keynote address and the lectures on Saturday morning were simply outstanding...to top it all, the students' performances on Friday and Saturday nights made us feel that we were in Carnegie Hall and not Kresge!!

Dr. Susan Hockfield Selected 16th President

"From my first conversations in the search process, I kept hearing about three of MIT's central values: the pursuit of truth, integrity, and the great meritocracy. I heard this from trustees, I heard it from faculty, I heard it from students, and I heard it from staff members. And what I heard told me that here was a place whose values closely mirrored my own, a place whose mission I could truly embrace, and a place where Tom, Elizabeth, and I could feel at home.

"I would guess that many of you are wondering how I imagine the future for MIT. My overarching goal is to help MIT to be an even greater MIT, to become even better at education, research, and invention. Part of this goal will be met by ensuring that anyone who has the extraordinary talents and ambition to make the most of what MIT has to offer has a fair chance to join this community.

"What do I want to see in MIT's future? Put quite simply, I want MIT to be the dream of every child who wants to make the world a better place. And also the dream of every engineer, scientist, scholar, and artist who draws inspiration from the idea of working in a hotbed of innovation, in service to humanity.

"At this point, I have only just started to learn about MIT. We are now in the season of going back to school, and it is time for me to do the same. You, all of you—students, faculty, and staff—will be my teachers in the weeks and months ahead. I am incredibly excited to be joining this learning community. And I am honored beyond words to join this institution as MIT's next president. Thank you very much."

Online Student Literary Journal Launched

Excerpts from story by
Sarah H. Wright, MIT News Office

A new web-based student literary journal "e.merging:Voices on the New Diasporas," launched recently at <http://web.mit.edu/emerging/>.

Undergraduate students and faculty advisors with a mutual interest in exploring transcultural identity collaborated on "e.merging" beginning in spring, 2004. The online journal will be published once each semester.

Isabelle de Courtivron, professor of foreign languages and literatures and director of the Center for Bilingual/Bicultural Studies, described the faculty experience that set the literary project in motion.

"In our writing and literature classes, we noticed that students were increasingly producing memorable short texts on issues related to their plural identities. We wanted to create a journal that would capture the wealth and diversity of these students' voices," de Courtivron said.

The first issue of "e.merging" includes short stories, poetry and creative non-fiction; artwork will appear in future editions.

Sam Hwang, a senior in management and an "e.merging" student editor, said, "I think it's equally important for people with diasporic experiences to share their stories as well as people without these experiences to learn by listening to, and reading, these stories."

Faculty advisors shared the students' enthusiasm for "e.merging." Rebecca Faery, director of First Year Writing, said, "A lot of really excellent writing is done by students at MIT, and it is always a pleasure to find ways to let people know about and enjoy that writing. 'e.merging' fills a particularly important niche."

MIT Professor Wins 2004 Nobel Prize in Physics

Excerpts from story by
Elizabeth A. Thomson,
MIT News Office

Professor Frank Wilczek, MIT's Herman Feshbach Professor of Physics, has won the 2004 Nobel Prize in physics for a "colorful" discovery in the world of quarks, the building blocks of the atomic nucleus.

The work, which involves the dominant, or "color," force between quarks, is key to several major problems in particle physics and beyond. Wilczek, 53, shares the prize of about $1.3 million with David J. Gross of the University of California at Santa Barbara, and H. David Politzer of the California Institute of Technology.

The three won "for the discovery of asymptotic freedom in the theory of the strong interaction," according to the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences. Asymptotic freedom is a phenomenon whereby quarks behave as free particles when they are close together, but become more strongly attracted to each other as the distance between them increases. This theory forms the key to the interpretation of almost all experimental studies involving modern particle accelerators.

"Thanks to their discovery, David Gross, David Politzer and Frank Wilczek have brought physics one step closer to fulfilling a grand dream, to formulate a unified theory comprising gravity as well -- a theory for everything," the Academy said in announcing the prize.

Wilczek joined the MIT faculty in 2000 with appointments in the Department of Physics and the Center for Theoretical Physics. This year he was named one of five Kavli Scholars through MIT's Center for Space Research, soon to be renamed the Kavli Institute for Astrophysics and Space Research.

Student Life - FSILGs ( Fraternities, Sororities & Independent Living Groups )

Peter Jaglom '05 & alumni parent, Drew Jaglom '74.

Fraternities and MIT: A Winning Combination

By Drew Jaglom '74, P '05

Thirty years ago this month, just after I graduated, The Tech, MIT's student newspaper, ran a column I co-authored on the benefits of fraternity living at MIT. Now, as the parent of an MIT senior, I've been asked to write a similar piece for this parents' newsletter. My son and I both joined the Delta Tau Delta fraternity at MIT, and we both found it played a huge part in our successful MIT careers. When I look back at my years at MIT, I remember my fraternity experiences even more than those in the classroom, in laboratories and on athletic fields.

A lot has changed in the last thirty years, but much is the same. MIT remains the nation's premier educational institution for science and technology. And fraternities, sororities and other independent living groups (FSILGs) remain an integral part of the MIT campus, with just under a third of all upperclass undergraduate students and nearly half of all upperclass men living in FSILGs. (While freshmen generally agree to join an FSILG soon after they arrive on campus, they initially live in an MIT dorm and may not move into the FSILG until their sophomore year.) Indeed, MIT has a higher proportion of its students in FSILGs than just about any other elite university. The groups are varied, with 27 fraternities (one is co-ed), five sororities, and five other independent living groups (four are co-ed).

The popularity of this system seems at odds with the stereotypes of MIT students and fraternities. These stereotypes also have changed little from thirty years ago, when I wrote "The MIT student is supposed to be a brilliant recluse, short and skinny, wearing thick glasses and carrying a slide rule." Well, the slide rule is gone, but the image of the nose-to-the-grindstone nerd remains, and is equally divorced from the reality of the well-rounded and well-adjusted students I meet as an alumnus interviewer. The image of the stereotypical fraternity - as an elitist, hard-partying Animal House where freshman are hazed and studying is impossible - is equally inaccurate, particularly at MIT, where the membership of the FSILGs reflects the students who make up the MIT community. They are smart, serious about academic success, but with many other interests in music, sports, politics and a myriad of other fields.

The FSILGs provide the perfect complement to the intensity of MIT. The academic challenges and pressures at MIT are unparalleled. The freshman year can be particularly stressful. The natural support group of a fraternity, sorority or other independent living group makes it much easier to deal with the academic rigor. Surrounded by upperclassmen who have been through the same classes and who care about their success, underclassmen in the FSILGs have an invaluable resource. All FSILGs also have a graduate student resident advisor who is available to help with advice on academics and life.

The FSILGs also provide a release from the stress and pressures of MIT through a close-knit group of friends, a social program, intramural athletic teams of every ability. The ability to decompress from the MIT grind periodically is essential, and the FSILGs make that easier to do, offering not just parties, but community service activities, group outings, intramural sports and, perhaps best of all, just the opportunity to hang out with good friends. In addition, only a small part of a college education comes in the classroom. Many of the most valuable lessons I learned came from my fraternity. The FSILGs are independent organizations. Their members must govern it and make it run smoothly. Most own their own houses, generally through alumni "house corporations". The members must plan and carry out all maintenance, renovations, finances, meal service, social events and other aspects of running a living group. Most are assisted by active alumni groups, but every member must be prepared to be a contributing part of the larger group, and to help make it the kind of place they want to live.

Indeed, this aspect of fraternity life complements the education MIT offers. MIT excels at creating brilliant engineers, scientists and entrepreneurs, but some have suggested that MIT could do more to enhance teamwork, communication, and leadership skills. It is precisely these leadership and interpersonal skills that are honed by living in an FSILG.

As fraternity members, my son and I learned how to help run an organization, work as a team for the benefit of all, and to resolve differences with a diverse group of people with backgrounds quite different from our own. And we learned to give and receive the support of some forty close friends, all interested in each other's well-being. That is a recipe for forming lifelong friendships. Indeed, the vast majority of my friends from MIT are those from my fraternity.

Looking back on my years at MIT, I attribute both my success and my enjoyment of that time to my fraternity. As a parent, I have seen my son have the same experience. I am convinced that joining an FSILG both enhances the MIT experience, and helps ensure a college career that is both successful and fun. With 37 different FSILGs, with varied approaches and differing focuses, I believe there is a good fit for every interested student. As both an alumnus and a parent, I strongly encourage every incoming freshman to explore the FSILG options.

Spend Junior Year at the University of Cambridge by Tish Callanan P'06 in consultation with the CME office at MIT

The Cambridge-MIT Institute was established in July 2000 and is a strategic alliance between two of the world's leading universities - MIT and the University of Cambridge in Cambridge, England. As an outgrowth of that partnership, the Cambridge-MIT Exchange (CME) Program was established and is now in its fourth year of operation. Each year, MIT and Cambridge exchange up to 50 students apiece who then spend a year studying at the other institution; at least 12 departments are participating in the program this academic year.

There are many reasons that MIT students want to study for a year at Cambridge. The teaching and learning environment at Cambridge is very different from MIT and many students enjoy the different- but equally challenging- approach. For example, homework is regularly assigned, but it is not required or graded in the sense that students are used to at MIT. There are very few tests given during the year; most courses culminate in a major examination given at year's end which requires substantial and deep preparation. As MIT students have discovered, Cambridge students spend much more of their time learning material without graded problem sets, review sessions, and regular tests; the Cambridge experience helps them to learn more independently and at a more self-directed pace.

Parents of current students who have participated are definitely excited about the program. Cindy Choi P' 05 told us of her daughter's experience. "Tammy studied Economics at King's College. She found the system to be quite different from MIT - evaluation is made basically through the year-end final examination, whereas at MIT, a system of ongoing assessment is used; second at Cambridge, a supervision system is used where each student has the opportunity of taking small group tutorial lessons with faculty or staff every week, where a lot of personal attention is given. Tammy found these interactions to be very inspiring and rewarding, so much so that she has almost made up her mind to go on for post-graduate studies in Economics."

Chwen Siripocanont P'05 echoed these thoughts as well. "Overall, I think the CME program was a wonderful experience. Given MIT's vigorous and advanced academic program, especially in Course 6, we thought that there would be no chance to study abroad. CME made it possible without slowing her down. Our daughter got to experience life in a different country and culture and to explore other European countries - walking a thousand miles is worth reading a million books."

Finally, Joan Connolly P '05 shared "I would recommend CME. It broadened my daughter's life experiences and she learned of English customs and culture and she now has English friends and family. Also, it opened up other opportunities for her to go to Ghana."

According to Peggy Enders, MIT Associate Dean for Undergraduate Education and manager of the CME program, "A year at Cambridge is a wonderful complement to our students MIT education. They're able to experience a university living and learning system that is very different from MIT but which is still of world class caliber and have no problem returning to MIT and graduating on time. In addition to academics, there is also ample opportunity for students to explore the arts and culture of this historic city along with time for travel to London or to other parts of the UK and Europe."

Students who participated in the exchange reported getting involved in many university and college extra-curricular activities, including Cambridge Amateur Boxing club, tennis, field hockey, volleyball, basketball, rowing, punting, theatre (HMS Pinafore), black tie dinners, May Balls, the Cambridge Expedition Society along with going to chapels, museums, and pubs. One student produced an annual Variety Show that involved a production crew of over 90 students!

Many of the students took time to travel extensively during the breaks between terms at Cambridge. Countries visited included Ireland, Spain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Austria, Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Scotland, Wales, Morocco and Sweden. After completing their year at Cambridge, three of the students we talked to spent their summer working in England, Ghana and India.

We asked Stephanie Claussen '05 to tell us about her experience. "My year abroad exceeded my expectations in every way possible. I knew I would like it here; I knew I would meet a lot of really interesting people; I knew I would travel; I knew that being in England would change the way I think about certain things. But I had no idea just how much I would love it at Cambridge and Queens, my college, and how much it would come to feel like home. I didn't dream of making as good of friends as I did-hopefully some that I will keep for the rest of my life, and that my traveling would eventually come to include some trips with these new friends. And I was not expecting to come back to the States with a new view on MIT, my country and myself." (continued on page 7)

Cambridge-MIT Exchange

MIT departments and the CME Office at MIT work closely with students to plan their academic program before they start their junior year at Cambridge. Dean Enders suggests that students start planning as early as possible and welcomes inquiries from students. Students should talk with their advisor or visit one of the participating department's undergraduate offices; most participating departments have a CME Web page as well.

The program is intended to minimize additional student costs. During the exchange year, students pay tuition to MIT; the only fees incurred in Cambridge are the costs of rent and food at the assigned College. This year, students were provided a supplemental grant to cover the costs of travel and other additional expenses.

Information sessions are held by participating MIT academic departments in the fall. Application to CME is through MIT departments with deadlines in early February, who then make recommendations based on students' academic records, brief essays, and interviews.

Interested students and parents can visit the CME website at web.mit.edu/cmi/ue/ to find out about participating departments and other details about the program. MIT students who have taken part in the exchange are available to answer questions and share their experiences. E-mail them at cmi-mit-04@mit.edu.

CHARLES M. VEST PRESIDENTIAL FELLOWSHIP FUND

President Vest has been an advocate for graduate education, encouraging increased support for fellowships. Graduate students play a vital role in the life of MIT, serving as indispensable partners in our research and teaching programs. Fellowships ensure that an MIT education is available to the exceptional and deserving graduate students who want to come to the Institute. Fellowships also allow our graduate students the opportunity to pursue the important research that drives progress in critical fields.

Your gift to the Charles M. Vest Presidential Fellowship Fund will help provide critical support for graduate education at the Institute. Please join us in this special tribute to President Vest.

The fund has recently been established to honor President Vest's contributions to MIT as he concludes his 15-year tenure at MIT. The Charles M. Vest Presidential Fellowship Fund will establish up to five Charles M. Vest Presidential Fellows, honoring outstanding graduate students. The Vest Fellows will join MIT's existing Society of Presidential Fellows.

Parents Fund Update

It is wonderful to report that the MIT Parents Fund raised $596,381 in FY04, reflecting a 20% increase over FY03, which surpasses our goal of $550,000. This incredible support was generated from 1,267 parent households. The Fund's success could not have been obtained without the support and enthusiasm of each Parent Fund Committee Member and all of the extremely generous MIT parents.

*This reflects capped reporting—that means only the first $100,000 of any gift is counted in these figures. Capped reporting allows us to more accurately gauge progress towards our goal. Total giving from non-alumni parents is $5,610,130.

2003-2004 Total MIT Parent Support

2004-2005 Goals

This year under the guidance of Dr. and Mrs. Timothy Poon P'05, we will set our sites on a $600,000 goal. To reach this goal it is important to stress participation at all levels. Every gift makes a difference. For more information about giving to MIT and designating your gift, visit:
